

To Whom It May Concern:

I have begun following the proposed nationwide standard for telephone solicitations in the last few days. I applaud the effort for standardization; however, to dilute already existing laws that have proven quite effective would be a mistake. I live in Indiana and chose to take part in Indiana's No-call program. I have received exactly one solicitation since the no-call rule went into effect.

I truly appreciate the efforts Indiana has made in protecting the quality of my homelife. If you seek a national standard, please consider one as strong as Indiana's or allow states with stricter requirements precedence, rather than dilluting their good efforts.

Sincerely,
Charles Von Eschen
